Need Help Locating A Lost Email

My MailMeter allows end-users to search their own email archive, it's like having an unlimited inbox with fast, intelligent searching

Powerful Searching

A user can easily search their archive for all the emails they ever sent or received:

- From a specific email address by a domain (all users at a specified organization)
- The search can also be narrowed to a date range.
- Search for specific text in the message body or attachments.

Wildcard, verb tense, fuzzy, Boolean and proximity searching are supported. Searching for a lost attachment can be done by attachment name, type or indexed content.

No More PSTs!

Eliminate the Need for Mailbox Quotas

Even though studies show that 91%of all emails are only read once, users demand unlimited mailbox sizes. However, your users can be easily convinced to accept rules for mailbox quotas and automatic deletion of older emails if they knew they could still access any email they ever sent or received- even if they had deleted it from their mailbox!

Email Storage Out of Control

Over time the size of your email storage grows larger and larger – more messages, bigger attachments, etc. You can't stop the sprawl of information. It will only get worse.

Users save emails for a variety of reasons: recent business transactions, communication discussions, copies of attachments, contracts, sales letters, memos, etc. They don't care that email servers were not built to be document management systems or repositories. Eventually, IT management realizes that email storage is out of control.

- Backups take too long while using expensive media.
- The mountain of backup tapes is not a good archive to search.
- Some important user always needs to find that "critical" email they deleted by mistake.
- Mailbox quotas are not a popular solution.
- Big mailboxes take a long time to open.
- Personal Email Storage (PSTs) are dangerous, easily corrupted and unsearchable.
